These major updates can take some time to reach your PC since Microsoft and PC manufacturers do extensive testing before fully rolling them out. Let's take a look at what's included in the latest version, how to find out what version you're running, and how you can skip the wait and get the most recent version of Windows 10 is the November 2021 Update. which was released on November 16, 2021. It does have a few other small changes, including compatibility with the "SAE Hash to Element" security standard used by some wireless WPA3 networks and GPU compute support for the Windows 10 you have, open your Start menu, and then click the gear-shaped "Settings" icon to open the Settings app. You can also fire up the app by pressing Windows+I. A version number of "21H2" indicates you're using the November 2021 Update. This is the latest version. If you see a lower version number, you're using an older version. Note: 21H2 is a smaller update, so the "Installed On" date may not be updated here and may show a date in 2020 instead of 2021. Rest assured that, if the Settings app says you're using version 21H2, you have the latest version. In the screenshot, the PC is running Windows 10 version 20H2. If you see a higher version number than 21H2 on your system, you're likely running an unstable Insider Preview version of Windows. How to Update to the Latest Version When Microsoft doesn't offer new Windows updates to all PCs at once. Instead, Microsoft rolls them out slowly over time, after both Microsoft and the various PC manufacturers check to see if they cause problems with different hardware just yet. However, you can override this and choose to install the update anyway. After all, you can always downgrade back to your current version of Windows 10 if you have any problems, assuming you choose to do so within ten days after upgrading. There's some risk here, but you are still installing a stable operating system update. To install the update anyway, you can now head to Settings > Update & Security > Windows Update and click the "Check for Updates" button. If a stable version of Windows 10 is available, Windows 10 is available, Windows Update may offer to download and install in a stable version of Windows 10 is available, Windows Update may offer to download and install now below a notice about a "Feature Update" being available for your PC. Microsoft You can also visit Microsoft's Download Windows 10 page to update. Click the "Update now" button to download the Update assistant tool, and then run the tool. It will upgrade your PC to the latest version of Windows 10—even if the update wasn't offered to you via Windows 10 page to update. The tool may still refuse to install the update if some issues need to be fixed with your PC's configuration first. You can either wait or try to troubleshoot the problem yourself. When Windows 10 first arrived, nabbing a free upgrade was as simple as clicking the Get Windows 10 notification prompt. Things are a bit different now, however, especially with the new free upgrade to Windows 11 being around. In addition to that, Microsoft no longer supports Windows 7, which means there's no more technical support, security updates, or bug-squashing. In other words, Windows 10 ended years ago, and the workaround to get Windows 10 for free with Assistive Technologies ended not long after that. No need to worry, though — there are still ways to get Microsoft's latest operating system without paying for a new license or breaking any rules. With product keys and digital licenses to have a valid product key or a digital license to get a free upgrade. What's the difference? When you purchase an operating system from Microsoft or any retailer, it comes with a product key to unlock it. It's printed and included in the packaging, emailed to you, or stored in the cloud, which is usually the case for system builders. What is a digital license? A digital license connects your installed Windows platform to a key embedded in prebuilt systems from Acer, Dell, HP, and so on. For a long time, these manufacturers printed product keys on labels stuck on PCs or printed and inserted them into product packaging. Microsoft's product keys on labels stuck on PCs or printed and inserted them into product packaging. PCs. That led Microsoft and manufacturers to introduce digital licenses in Windows 8 as an antipiracy measure, so end users aren't installing the platform on additional machines. However, Microsoft also moved Windows 7 over to this method. This license becomes locked to your Microsoft account. If you legitimately purchased and no longer use these older versions, Microsoft's Windows 10 activation servers will accept Windows 7 and can't find the key, you can try signing in to your Microsoft account and checking past downloads to see if your product key is there. Sites like Amazon also keep a record of purchased downloads, but these rarely include the product key itself, though it may help narrow down where it could be. Finally, you can download Windows 8/8.1 license key from your prebuilt system's motherboard and move on. In all other cases, you must supply an authentic, genuine product key during the setup process, or you can do it later by visiting Settings > Update & security > Activation. Again, unless you have a valid digital license or product key to get a free upgrade, you will be required to pay for a new Windows 10 Home product key. Step 1: Your first step in acquiring a free Windows 10 upgrade is to visit Microsoft's download Windows 10 webpage. Step 2: Select the Download tool now button. You'll see MediaCreationTool21H1.exe download onto your PC, which shouldn't take longer than a minute to occur. Disconnect any unnecessary accessories to help reduce the chance of errors. Step 3: Launch the Media Creation Tool. Step 4: Once it is downloaded, open it, and accept Microsoft's terms. As shown above, you have two options: Upgrade another PC or perform a clean install on the current PC. However, in both cases, the tool will temporarily download a disk image of Windows 10, so be sure you have enough space for the file — around 4GB, at least. Step 5: Select the Upgrade this PC now option and follow the prompts. The tool will scan your computer to see if it's compatible and may present a list of problematic programs or hardware that could stall the upgrade. If needed, uninstall programs to address the installer's concerns. Step 6: With all issues resolved, the installer will try to port over all the data it can. Keep in mind, however, the vast gap between Windows 7 and windows 8 and windows 8 and windows 9 a and apps will be compatible with Windows 10, and some may stop working. Step 7: It's essential to be aware of this and prepare before upgrading. Back up or convert any crucial data before you continue. Step 8: Finish installation. Step 9: As the installer progresses, your PC will restart a few times. As part of the process, it will pull your existing digital license from your hardware during the setup — you won't need to activate it. If prompted for a valid product key, enter it now or do so later by visiting Settings > Update & security > Activation. Keep in mind that this won't work for Windows 10 upgrade. Step 10: You'll also receive the same flavor of Windows that first shipped with your PC — Home, Pro, Enterprise, or Education. If you'd rather use Windows 10 Pro instead of the Windows 1 Windows 10 for free — at least for now. There are other ways you can get Windows 10 if you need it, including free and low-cost options that may be worth exploring. Upgrade from Windows 7 to Windows 10. Note that if you're a student, or work at a large organization, you might be eligible for free or discounted Windows. Microsoft and not activate it, which means you don't pay for it. It turns out this is safer than it sounds because Microsoft is pretty lax about enforcing activation. Your copy of Windows shouldn't shut down, but some limitations kick in after your 30-day evaluation: An Activate Windows Now notification appears in settings. Personalization features such as changing the wallpaper and accent colors are disabled. Updates may discontinue in the future. Various apps and features stop working. You'll receive daily notifications to activate by Microsoft. Although it may appear like a fantastic steal (sounds about right), in reality, you're breaking the rules and defying Microsoft's licensing agreement. Microsoft would be completely within its rights to pursue legal damages against anyone using the Windows 10 OS unactivated, though they haven't done so yet as far as we know. Better safe than sorry. In the end, if Microsoft wanted to stop people from using these versions, they could do it. Buy a third-party Windows 10 keyYou can find third-party vendors who sell Windows 10 manufacturer keys at a bargain. Going through these companies enables you to purchase the keys at half (or even lower) of the full Microsoft price. While it may sound like a scam, you can find reliable vendors who just happen to have a good price, but you need to stay on your toes.
